Dear Arlene,

Thanks for your sarcastic opening of your last letter. I think I better take the 5th on that. You mentioned about a Tempest. What Tempest? I never received a letter with the news of it. What color is it? I wish I was home to help Charlie fix it. About getting muscles driving it, you've got all the necessary muscles (well arranged ones) right now.

Sorry about the slide. No prints. I'm sending another (half ruined). It was taken in Henderson. I guess you will have to ask your girl friend for her slide receiver again.

About drinking. So! you like to get drunk with others & not me. You never did with me. I don't mean drunk I mean hi. Oh ~~well~~ well, what's the heck. I do remember one time, come to thinking of it. Remember at the Gal? You were a little high!

Yes we did have some relaxing times in my bar. Not enough of them!

I am going to try to make up for lost time. It's my duty. No joking. I long to really know you every thought, like, dislike, ect. One month

Description

Correspondence; November 19, 1967. This letter is from Gerald Feola to his then girlfriend Arlene Trentacosta. The letter begins with talking about events and issues brought up in a previous letter. It continues to detail an incident during his job on the flight deck as final inspector of aircraft being launched. He explains to Arlene the guilt he is harboring for keeping a radar jamming aircraft from participating in a strike mission. On that mission, the A-4 Skyhawk of Wilson Denver Key was shot down. Key was captured and became a prisoner of war, POW.
